

CHARACTERISTICS OF SUPERCONDUCTORS

- The current in the superconductors is sustained for a very long period.
- When the current is increased above its critical value ( $I_c$ ), the superconductor behaves like a normal conductor.
- The magnetic field does not penetrate the superconductor (Meissner effect). However, above the critical magnetic field, the superconductor becomes a normal conductor.
- Good conductors at room temperature are not superconductors and superconducting materials are not good conductors at room temperature.
- Ferromagnetic materials and anti-ferromagnetic materials are not superconductors.
- Bismuth, antimony, and tellurium become superconductors at high pressure.
- It has been found that most of the materials having high resistivity are superconductors
