Muscles of the neck

The muscles of the neck are responsible for the movement of the head and neck. They are divided into superficial and deep muscles. The superficial muscles are the trapezius, sternocleidomastoid, and platysma. The deep muscles are the thyrohyoid, longus colli, and longus capitis.

Cervical vertebrae

The cervical vertebrae are the vertebrae of the neck. They are characterized by the presence of a foramen transversarium in each transverse process. The first cervical vertebra is the axis, which is unique in that it has a dens (odontoid process) that fits into the anterior arch of the dens of the axis. The other cervical vertebrae are the vertebrae of the neck, and they are numbered C1 through C7.

The articulation of the skull and vertebral column is a complex process that involves the occipital condyles of the skull fitting into the occipital foramina of the axis.
