Health And Health Behavior Among Elderly Americans An Age Stratification Perspective:

Health and Health Behavior Among Elderly Americans Fredric D. Wolinsky, 1990 Health Care Systems in Japan and the United States Ryuzo Sato, Elias Grivoyannis, Barbara Byrne, Chengping Lian, 2012-12-06

The health care sector has become a major component of the contemporary economies of Japan and the United States. It absorbs significant proportions of the GDP in both countries and places increasing stress on private government and corporate budgets. As their income rises, the citizens of Japan and the United States choose to allocate increasing portions of it on health care services because of the direct contribution of health care services to prolonged life expectancy, reduced morbidity, or other indicators of improved health and well-being. The health care sector is a major source of employment and affects the lives of all citizens. Adequate health care services are expected to have an important contribution to the quality of human life in any society. With so much at stake, arrangements for planning, financing, and operating health care service systems have increasingly come to be regarded as important economic and political issues. The political importance of health care is evidenced by the health care reform proposals of the Clinton administration in the United States and the deep involvement of the government in the medical care security system in Japan. As policy makers in both countries look ahead to the coming decades, they realize that the imperatives of economic restructuring, globalization, and their rapidly aging societies will affect the way in which health care is organized, delivered, and financed.

Aging and Human Motivation Ernest Furchtgott, 2013-03-14

I first met Ernest Furchtgott twenty-five years ago after joining the faculty of the College of Social Work at the University of South Carolina. At that time, Ernie chaired the Department of Psychology. In the following three years, we collaborated with an Academic Committee on Gerontology in conceptualizing and shaping the University's Certificate of Graduate Study in Gerontology Program, guiding it to final approval by the South Carolina Commission on Higher Education. For twenty years, we team-taught our graduate-level course, Psychosocial Approaches to Gerontology, involving colleagues from related disciplines. Over the years, we examined and jointly graded hundreds of research posters prepared by our graduate students in gerontology as their final course requirement. Several years ago, Ernie formally retired from the university. He instantly agreed to my request that he continue teaching the psychology of aging portion of our interdisciplinary course. On campus nearly every day since retirement, Ernie frequently telephoned to discuss a recent article in The Gerontologist or a paper presentation that had excited him at the Gerontological Society's annual scientific meeting. He maintained a clear presence in the academic community.

Handbook on Ethnicity, Aging, and Mental Health Deborah Padgett, 1995-01-30

This state-of-the-art multidisciplinary reference is the first to assess the empirical research and conceptual frameworks for understanding the mental health needs and service use of the ethnic elderly. Leading scholars, researchers, and clinicians in gerontology, epidemiology, psychiatry, psychology, sociology, anthropology, nursing, and social work appraise varying approaches to the demographics, the mental health status, and service use of the ethnic elderly and issues in the diagnosis, treatment, and mental health service.

Handbook of the Life Course Michael J. Shanahan, Jeylan T. Mortimer, Monica Kirkpatrick Johnson, 2015-10-26 Building on the success of the 2003 Handbook of the Life Course this second volume identifies future directions for life course research and policy The introductory essay and the chapters that make up the five sections of this book show consensus on strategic next steps in life course studies These next steps are explored in detail in each section Section I on life course theory provides fresh perspectives on well established topics including cohorts life stages and legal and regulatory contexts It challenges life course scholars to move beyond common individualistic paradigms Section II highlights changes in major institutional and organizational contexts of the life course It draws on conceptual advances and recent empirical findings to identify promising avenues for research that illuminate the interplay between structure and agency It examines trends in family school and workplace as well as contexts that deserve heightened attention including the military the criminal justice system and natural and man made disaster The remaining three sections consider advances and suggest strategic opportunities in the study of health and development throughout the life course They explore methodological innovations including qualitative and three generational longitudinal research designs causal analysis growth curves and the study of place Finally they show ways to build bridges between life course research and public policy

Aging in Rural America C. Neil Bull, 1993 Focusing on some of the major issues that have arisen in research of the rural elderly contributors to this book review the literature highlight the controversies and examine methodological and substantive issues in research An introductory section looks at the demographic characteristics of the rural elderly Issues related to resource development are then examined looking at the rural elderly in terms of their social needs their economic contributions to communities the development of senior centres as community focal points and the need for transportation alternatives Physical and mental health issues are also discussed and finally attention is given to social support such as home and community care

The Environment for Aging Russell A. Ward, Mark La Gory, Susan R. Sherman, 1988 The nature and consequences of aging depend on its environmental context and the literature does not treat the various environmental dimensions in an integrated fashion The authors introduce a general approach to the human ecosystem highlighting theoretical and empirical issues necessary to an understanding of person environment interaction related to aging They then investigate in detail three aspects of the environment of older persons residential and neighborhood interpersonal support networks and age related attitudes They give specific attention to the impact of the age composition of neighborhoods and interpersonal networks The authors present findings from their interview survey of 1 185 community residents aged 60 and over Major findings from the interviews include Despite objective neighborhood problems older persons express high neighborhood satisfaction This partly reflects limited residential options as well as a passive and vicarious spatial experience The environment is experienced in diverse ways however urbanism and personal competence shape the nature and outcomes of person environment interaction Older persons have relatively robust interpersonal support networks Perceived sufficiency of contact and support are more salient to morale than are more objective measures of interpersonal support Although attitudes toward other older people are generally favorable patterns of age identity reflect a detrimental view of aging There is little evidence that socialization for aging or age group solidarity make aging easier in this regard Older persons exhibit moderate age homogeneity within their interpersonal networks partly reflecting neighborhood age concentration Contrary to the apparent benefits of planned age segregated housing age homogeneity in neighborhoods and networks does not contribute to well being The authors examine three major themes in their concluding chapter age itself does not loom large in the lives of these community residents though age becomes salient under certain conditions there is diversity in the implications of the environmental context for aging in particular reflecting an environmental docility hypothesis and aging must be viewed in interactional or transactional terms older people construct the environment as a subjective entity
