Medical Devices and Biomaterials for the Developing World Olumurejiwa A. Fatunde,Sujata K. Bhatia,2012-08-31 This book focuses on the adoption of medical technology in the developing world and the role that can be played by new biomaterials These authors urge that advanced technology be aligned with the needs of developing and emerging markets and an alternative definition of technology be embraced This new technology considers natural sources of materials and tools for treatment and is not restricted to the usual traditional computerized or electronic technology This book explores the difficulties that accompany successful transfer of technologies between disparate settings The book then leaves the world of traditional technology and focuses on biomaterials which represent an enormous opportunity for developing societies to become active participants in the development of new technologies Biomaterials can be used in the treatment of disease throughout the developing world and beyond Biomaterials encompass a range of naturally derived substances of particular interest here are naturally derived and synthetically manufactured materials with potential applications in different body systems Because many of these materials can be grown the agricultural output of developing nations is an obvious potential source of these biomaterials The book considers the cases of Ghana and Nicaragua as examples of the broader situation in West Africa and Central South America These two regions are uniquely positioned with regard to both health care and technological capabilities and both stand to grow significantly in the coming years While the agricultural sectors of the two nations are quite different both are major producers of corn and other materials that should be investigated further Of course the difficulty in using a foodstuff for medical purposes is fully explored

Distribution of Resources in the Nigerian Health Care System Anthony Okechukwu Nnadi,2020-01-09 This publication representing the doctoral dissertation of Rev Fr Anthony Okechukwu Nnadi examines the healthcare system in Nigeria in the light of the Catholic social teaching He supports that the allocation of health care resources is not only a matter of organization but is also an ethical problem The debacles and failure of the Nigerian health system result from many factors including lack of will to implement the right policies on the ground corruption among the leaders lack of justice lack of respect for the dignity of each human person mismanagement and insufficient consideration and application of ethical principles in the administration of common good especially in the distribution of health care and social resources For the distribution of health care resources this doctoral dissertation suggests that priority be given to the basic health care needs of Nigerian citizens especially those who have no means of satisfying these needs themselves In this context the research affirms that great attention needs to be paid to ensuring that the principle of human dignity is completely respected in each and every policy in this important area This doctoral thesis is an ethical vision of social reality in Nigeria It proposes the person centred Catholic principles as a possible way forward in the distribution of health care resources in Nigeria It does not imply substituting the economic political and health care experts in offering technical solutions in their areas of competence The author is convinced that healthcare allocation is also an ethical issue that needs to be governed by ethical principles The key factors for choosing this theme are based on the author s knowledge of the deplorable condition of the health care system in Nigeria and his desire to save human lives Rev Fr Anthony Okechukwu Nnadi believes that we are all stewards of human life This implies a moral obligation to protect the dignity of the human person which is inseparable from protecting human life
