In the autumn of 1863, beset as always by office seekers, Lincoln's physician told him that he was suffering from varioloid, a mild form of smallpox.

"Is it contagious?" asked the president.

"Very contagious," the doctor assured him.

Lincoln seemed oddly pleased. The doctor asked why.

"There is one good thing about this," the president told him. "Now I have something I can give everybody."

In criticizing "malefactors of great wealth," Theodore Roosevelt did not spare members of the educated class. "A man who has never gone to school may steal from a freight car," he once jibed, "but if he has a university education, he may steal the whole railroad."

Reagan was perpetually suspicious of Washington's tendency to tax and spend. He defined a taxpayer as "someone who works for the federal government but doesn't have to take a civil service examination."

Leaving the White House one morning to visit a penitentiary in Baltimore, Eleanor Roosevelt was careful not to disturb FDR. When he subsequently asked Mrs. Roosevelt's secretary about his wife's absence, he was told, "She's in prison, Mr. President."

"I'm not surprised," responded FDR, "but what for?"

Ironically, for a man attacked because of his faith, as president Kennedy suffered criticism from Catholic Church officials on account of his opposition to federal aid to parochial schools. Having sent his education bill to Congress, the president recalled Al Smith's defeat back in 1928, after which the Democratic candidate had sent a mythical one word telegram to the Pope, reading simply, "Unpack."

After his latest press conference on the school bill, said Kennedy, "I received a one-word wire from the Pope: 'Pack.'"

When it was revealed during the 1992 campaign that Vice President Quayle intended to be "a pit bull" in the coming campaign, Clinton quipped, "That's got every fire hydrant in America worried."
