Obedient Servants? Edmund John Richard Norman, 2003 The experiences of a representative sample of public servants, members of Parliament, and informed observers of the control systems of New Zealand's public management model adopted in the early 1990s are examined in this book. Revealed is a trend that is moving away from the tradition of delivering public services through a centralized bureaucracy. Richard Norman uses his experience critiquing public service bureaucracies as a journalist working for a government-owned corporation that crashed after becoming too entrepreneurial and delivering training in finance and management to public servants adjusting to the systems of the New Public Management model to examine the creation of a new model of control that achieves a balance between control and empowerment.

Montgomery Van Wart, 2013-10-28 First Published in 1998 The single most important purpose of this book is to create a field of public administration values a field that currently does not exist in a recognizable form Surely values are discussed significantly and usefully by the fields of ethics management decision making and organization behavior and theory to mention only a few But these discussions are inevitably narrower in scope than is necessary for a true field of values Such a field is needed to help bridge the seeming chasm about discussions of values among the established fields A second purpose of this text is to provide a comprehensive treatment of values A third purpose of the text is to provide a balanced treatment giving all the major schools of thought roughly the same coverage so that their values can be compared as dispassionately as possible A fourth purpose of the book is to make the subject accessible to and interesting for practitioners and students
