Into the Unknown

From the 1400s to the 1600s, explorers from Spain, Portugal, France, Holland, and England tried to find an ocean route from Europe to Asia. They wanted to buy riches from Asia and bring them back to sell at huge profits. In the search for a route, explorers found two continents unknown in Europe. These were later named North America and South America. To explorers, they were a new world.

The First Americans

Most historians believe that the first people came to North America about 10,000 years ago. They were probably hunters from Asia looking for food. They crossed over a land bridge at the Bering Strait that connected Alaska and Siberia. This land bridge was later flooded by melting ice sheets. Over time, they settled throughout North, Central, and South America.

CRUISE The first man to sail the first big ship, an Italian navigator, was claimed to be the first European to discover South America. He named his first land not part of Asia. A German navigator used the Latin word of his name, America, to label this new world.
