Evaluating the processes of neonatal intensive care Joseph Schulman, 2004 Evaluating the Processes of Neonatal Intensive Care Joseph Schulman, 2004 The Problem of Practice Variation in Newborn Medicine Joseph Schulman, 2022-05-20 Neonatal intensive care unit NICU teams in the US and around the world receive performance reports that locate their particular value for selected process and outcome measures within the range of values from all reporting NICUs Understandably many providers focus primarily if not exclusively on their particular value When a value appears undesirable providers often justify it in an apparent reflex response rather than critically analysing their data Exceedingly few reflect on the width or implications of the range within which their performance lies Standard medical education does not include these skills yet unwarranted practice variation necessarily compromises a population s overall quality of care Researchers report wide variation in health care resource use with little connection to patient outcomes challenging the belief that directing incrementally more resources at certain healthcare problems necessarily produces better results This book provides requisite knowledge to enable readers without research expertise to understand the notion of unwarranted practice variation how to recognize it its ubiquity and why it is generally undesirable why narrowing is pervasiveness improves quality The book begins by describing practice variation its prevalence and why it matters Next it examines alternative conceptualizations of NICU work One view is task oriented while the other is aim oriented NICU teams rarely articulate their aims explicitly so this book offers examples that guide thinking and action Finally this book asks Which rate is right what is the performance target The answer entails identifying the lowest resource use rate associated with desirable outcomes This requires data describing efficient and predictably performing provision of current evidence based care along with relationships to a variety of outcomes Provider conceptualization of healthcare quality also is often vague The challenge lies in defining this notion operationally This book does precisely that and gives readers tools to think critically about process outcome and quality measures via some understanding of systems risk adjustment modelling and discriminating signal from noise in process data

Analysis of Cerebral and Respiratory Activity in Neonatal Intensive Care Units for the Assessment of Maturation and Infection in the Early Premature Infant Xavier Navarro, 2013 This Ph D dissertation processes and analyzes signals from the neonatal intensive care units NICUs for the study of maturity systemic infection sepsis and the influence of immunization in the premature newborn A special attention is paid to the electroencephalography and the breathing signal The former is often contaminated by several sources of noise thus methods based on the signals decomposition and optimal noise cancellation adapted to the characteristics of the immature EEG were proposed and evaluated objectively on real and simulated signals By means of the EEG and delta burst analysis detected automatically by a proposed classifier infant s maturation and the effects of vaccination are studied Concerning the second signal breathing non linear and fractal methods are adapted to evaluate maturity and sepsis A robustness study of estimation methods is also conducted showing that the Hurst exponent estimated on respiratory variability signals is a good detector of infection
