Guiding you through the process of evaluating your thoughts

Skill 3: Examining the evidence for and against your thoughts

Our thoughts aren't facts. They're assumptions, feelings, beliefs, automatic thoughts and opinions or best guesses about what is going on in our lives.

The problem is that these guesses aren't always accurate or useful.

Remember, the aim of evaluating thoughts as CBT is not to think happy thoughts but it is to think accurately. How can you test your guesses (automatic thoughts) into more accurate interpretations?

Examining the evidence for and against your thoughts can help you evaluate whether your thoughts are based on facts and work for you, rather than against you.
