The Troxler nuclear moisture density gauges are used by many contractors, engineers and highway departments for compaction control of soil, aggregate, concrete and full depth asphalt. The gauges meet or exceed the ASTM standards D6938, D2950 and C1040. The operator selects the density mode, backscatter or direct transmission, based on the material type and the thickness of the layer being measured. The Model 3430 is the simplest and most economical gauge offered by Troxler. The Model 3440 adds a larger keypad and more available features that are needed for some construction projects. Both models are customizable to meet your testing needs.

The Model 3430 is a simple gauge for users who don't need many "extras". The enhanced platform allows for many updates and advantages such as:

- Updated electronics
- NiMH batteries with fast recharge
- Larger backlit display screen - 8mm characters
- Optional user-friendly features that can be added:
 - External beeper
 - Alkaline battery backup feature
 - Remote start keypad on the handle
 - Data storage
 - USB port for data transfer
 - Spanish and French language options

Moisture Measurement

Moisture content is measured in a nondestructive test mode. Moisture is determined through the detection of thermalized neutrons ("fast" neutrons which have been slowed by the hydrogen present in the material, normally in the form of water).
