Cancer Screening Khalid Aziz,George Y. Wu,2001-11-26 In Cancer Screening A Practical Guide for Physicians a panel of highly experienced clinicians and researchers from around the world present their up to date screening techniques for a wide variety of cancers The techniques range from screening for breast gynecological and gastrointestinal cancers to testing for urogenital dermatological and respiratory cancers In addition to providing the busy practitioner with quick access to guidelines for particular cancers the epidemiology and biology of the various cancers as well as the sensitivity and specificity of the methods are discussed in detail Authoritative and physician friendly Cancer Screening A Practical Guide for Physicians offers to all internists oncologists various subspecialists and primary care physicians a concise practical review of cancer screening designed specifically for daily use in the consulting room Quantitative Methods of Evaluation of Cancer Screening Stephen W. Duffy, Catherine Hill, Jacques Esteve, 2001-08-15 Cancer screening programmes have become routine practice throughout the developed world aiming to detect the presence of the disease prior to the manifestation of symptoms and to increase the likelihood of successful treatment Naturally these programmes require regular monitoring to ensure that screening quality is maintained and to advance the early warning system as much as possible Quantitative Methods for the Evaluation of Cancer Screening is a professional title designed to provide the researchers of these screening programmes with up to date methods and tools for improving evaluation The book presents an introduction to cancer screening and to the methods that are employed for its monitoring followed by an in depth account of the more complicated modelling approaches Each chapter is written by an international expert in the field and imparts practical specialist information that the reader can apply to the evaluation of their own programmes Case studies illustrate the methods in practice and provide further illumination of the fields of breast cervix large bowel and neuroblastoma screening Journal of the National Cancer Institute, 2004 Each issue is packed with extensive news about important cancer related science policy politics and people Plus there are editorials and reviews by experts in the field book reviews and commentary on timely topics An Evaluation of Cancer Control Measures International Union against Cancer. Committee on Cancer Prevention and Detection, 1974 Evaluation Study of the American Cancer Society's Cancer Screening in Primary Care Program Lori Belle-Isle, 2001 Evaluation and Monitoring of Screening Programmes Europe Against Cancer Programme, 2001 Population based cancer registries are an important tool for evaluating the efficacy of cancer screening programmes This publication provides a wide range of experience of the use of registries in evaluating and monitoring screening programmes in both Europe and North America It will help researchers choose the necessary data and apply appropriate models Methodological Aspects of Emulating Target Trials for Causal Evaluation of Cancer Screening Programs Using Health Claims Data Malte Braitmaier, 2024 Cancer screening affects cancer related outcomes by detection at an early possibly even pre cancerous stage thereby enabling timely treatment initiation or removal of precursors Ideally efficacy of cancer screening programs should be assessed in randomized controlled trials before population wide implementation In the absence of trial evidence or when interest lies in real world effectiveness observational data must be used to assess the effectiveness of existing programs However limitations of observational study designs and data sources must be addressed Issues relating to unclear research questions or incorrect temporal alignment of study design elements have been identified as a common source of major bias in non interventional research in recent years Target trial emulation has been proposed as a framework to formulate clear and precise estimands by defining the study protocol of a hypothetical target trial that would answer the research question at hand and emulating said target trial as best as possible using observational data As part of this thesis I developed a detailed study design for the evaluation of the German mammography screening program regarding its effect on breast cancer related mortality Furthermore I conducted an extensive realistic simulation study to assess the potential of residual immortal time bias due to the coarse granularity of discrete time available in the underlying database Next I emulated a target trial to assess the causal effect of screening colonoscopy on the incidence of colorectal cancer Differing effectiveness by site of the tumor was reported in previous observational studies on screening colonoscopy I showed in the present thesis that previous observational studies overestimated the effect of screening colonoscopy and that the difference by site was largely a result of design induced bias I extended the initial study design to more complex settings with a sustained no screening strategy and to strategies incorporating the quality of colonoscopy Finally I conducted substantive sensitivity analyses tailored to the specific study design and research question e g concerning residual confounding bias strengthening confidence in the validity of findings
