

Current Problems and Resolutions

Under this heading appear summaries of data that, in 500 words or less, would increase our comprehension of socially compelling problems, move us somewhat closer to a solution, and clearly show promise of transcending their own origin in the Zeitgeist. Additional details concerning results can be obtained by communicating directly with the investigator or, when indicated, by requesting supplementary material from Microfiche Publications.

Factors Affecting Student Attitudes Toward War

DAVID LESTER

Center for the Study of Suicide

PREVIOUS RESEARCHERS ON ATTITUDES toward war have explored gender differences (Rosenbaum & Rosenbaum, 1973); associations with personality traits, such as hostility (Teevan & Stamps, 1973), stubbornness and a need for order (Farber, 1955); and locus of control (Granberg & May, 1972). In the present research I had two goals: (a) to devise a measure of attitudes toward war that would be more adequate than those used in earlier research and (b) to explore current personality correlates of attitudes toward war to determine whether associations identified in the 1970s pertaining to the Vietnam War still hold true.

From a set of items about war written by American students in social science courses and modified from previously published scales, I selected 50 items for the new attitudes questionnaire. These items were presented in a Likert-type format to classes of undergraduate college students. In addition, the following personality traits were measured: masculinity and femininity (Bem, 1974); self-
