The close of the fifteenth century had left the whole structure of medieval Europe to all appearance intact. Statesmen and writers like Philip de Commynes had apparently as little suspicion that the state of things they saw around them, in which they had grown up and of which they were representatives, was ever destined to pass away as Lord Palmerston or any other statesman of the Cobden Bright period had that the existing system of society, say in 1860, was at any time likely to suffer other changes than those of detail. Society was organised on the feudal hierarchy of status. In the first place, a noble class, spiritual and temporal, was opposed to a peasantry, either wholly servile or but nominally free. In addition to this opposition of noble and peasant, there was that of the township, which in its corporate capacity stood in the relation of lord to the surrounding peasantry.
