Williams, 1980 The literature dealing with age and growth of spot Leiostomus xanthurus sand seatrout Cynoscion arenarius and silver seatrout C. nothus was reviewed Length frequency analysis was the most frequently used technique for ageing the three species however size overlap renders the technique progressively unsuitable as the fish grow older Otolith and scale analysis both of which have been verified as usable for ageing spot yielded reported ages of up to 3 and 4 5 years respectively A mathematical summary of age and growth information was developed using least squares regression analysis A composition growth rate $Y = A Tu$ where Y mean total length in millimeters X mean age in months $A = 6.89 \times 10^{-2}$ and $B = 2.20 \times 10^{-3}$ was obtained Length frequency analysis was the only successful method reported for ageing the two seatrouts Up to three age classes have been identified for sand seatrout The life span for silver seatrout has been estimated as being little more than one year Analysis of growth of the seatrouts was not possible due to insufficient data The techniques used and the problems involved are discussed and recommendations for future work are made Marine Fisheries Review ,1983 Order Gasterosteiformes C.
