Abstract

The article begins by considering priesthood as a family pastoral care vocation in the local Catholic Church, South Africa. For most priests the priesthood is the superlative gift, a particular calling to participate in the mystery of Christ, a calling which confers on priests the inspiring possibility of speaking and acting in God's holy name. Pope John Paul II stated that the church prays continuously for new priestly callings and celebrates at the increase in such vocations. Priest make promises relating to the sacrament of the priesthood and these all have great implications. What is essentially in the balance is the word priests ultimately give to Jesus Christ himself. Loyalty to the vocation builds up the holy church, and when there is an act of unfaithfulness this indeed a painful wound to the mystical body of Our Lord. This work deliberates upon the vocation of the priesthood as a career, and it briefly examines and assesses the challenges encountered in promoting the priestly vocation. This includes the manageable number of young people who decide to become priests. Various causes are linked, such as for example the departure from the spiritual life, the disappointment of the missionaries, the induction of young men, the need for participation and commitment. It's an issue that requires important internal and external collaboration. A critical analysis of the social milieu of local South African Catholic Church serves as a methodology.

Introduction

A vocation is fundamentally a profession. From Christian religious context, a vocation infers someone has had a divine call to live a religious life to serve others. Through the Sacrament of Baptism, all Christians have calling in their lives, i.e. to live a life of holiness. People have distinct vocations and thus a calling. A priest is expected to live in holiness, thus seeking to constantly live in the presence of God and have a living relationship with God. The vocation of priesthood is thus a supreme sacred calling. God calls priests to serve in diverse ways. The self-respect and spirit of the priesthood is not just in what a priest may do, but in who he is. He is called to be An Alter Christus (Another Christ in the World). Generally, one seeking to be in a priestly vocation attends Mass regularly, prays regularly, receives the sacrament of Confession regularly, and tries as best as one can to serves others. Above all, he strives to grow spiritually. The article discusses the vocation of the priesthood as a career. It is a ministry of pastoral care for Christian families. The Society of Sant Plus X states on its website:

The priesthood is also a vocation, but one infinitely superior to all other vocations because it is supernatural. God wants to shower humanity with
