Garden Cities of To-morrow, Etc Sir Ebenezer Howard,1902      Garden Cities of To-Morrow (Illustrated Edition)

Ebenezer Howard,2021-04-07 The Town magnet it will be seen offers as compared with the Country magnet the advantages of high wages opportunities for employment tempting prospects of advancement but these are largely counterbalanced by high rents and prices Its social opportunities and its places of amusement are very alluring but excessive hours of toil distance from work and the isolation of crowds tend greatly to reduce the value of these good things The well lit streets are a great attraction especially in winter but the sunlight is being more and more shut out while the air is so vitiated that the fine public buildings like the sparrows rapidly become covered with soot and the very statues are in despair Palatial edifices and fearful slums are the strange complementary features of modern cities The Country magnet declares herself to be the source of all beauty and wealth but the Town magnet mockingly reminds her that she is very dull for lack of society and very sparing of her gifts for lack of capital There are in the country beautiful vistas lordly parks violet scented woods fresh air sounds of rippling water but too often one sees those threatening words Trespassers will be prosecuted Rents if estimated by the acre are certainly low but such low rents are the natural fruit of low wages rather than a cause of substantial comfort while long hours and lack of amusements forbid the bright sunshine and the pure air to gladden the hearts of the people The one industry agriculture suffers frequently from excessive rainfalls but this wondrous harvest of the clouds is seldom properly ingathered so that in times of drought there is frequently even for drinking purposes a most insufficient supply Even the natural healthfulness of the country is largely lost for lack of proper drainage and other sanitary conditions while in parts almost deserted by the people the few who remain are yet frequently huddled together as if in rivalry with the slums of our cities But neither the Town magnet nor the Country magnet represents the full plan and purpose of nature Human society and the beauty of nature are meant to be enjoyed together Taken from Garden Cities of To Morrow Illustrated Edition written by Ebenezer Howard      Garden Cities of To-morrow Howard Ebenezer,1966      Considerazioni Intorno a 'Garden Cities of To-morrow'.
