

Allergic Reactions to Medications: What You Need to Know

An allergy to medication is an immune system reaction. When you ingest the medicine that you're allergic to, your body responds as if the medicine is a foreign substance.

If you have an anaphylactic response, you may experience the following symptoms:

- Facial or throat swelling
- Wheezing
- Hives
- Dizziness
- Vomiting
- Hypotension
- Shock

Some of the most common reasons for developing an allergic reaction are your body chemistry, genetics, exposure to certain drugs, or an underlying medical condition or disease.

General Allergy Symptoms

- Itchy skin
- Fever
- Swelling
- Nasal congestion
- Skin rash
- Itchy and watery eyes
- Wheezing
- Shortness of breath

Keep track of the medications that you're using and if you have any adverse or unusual reactions while taking the medicine.

An allergist may recommend desensitization treatment, the goal is to make your body have no allergic response to the medication.
