Rozensky,Jerry J. Sweet,Steven M. Tovian,2013-06-29 For two decades I have been responding to questions about the nature of health psychology and how it differs from medical psychology behavioral medicine and clinical psychology From the beginning I have taken the position that any application of psychological theory or practice to problems and issues of the health system is health psychology I have repeatedly used an analogy to Newell and Simon s General Problem Solver program of the late 1950s and early 1960s which had two major functional parts in addition to the executive component One was the problem solving core the procedural competence the other was the representation of the problem environment In the analogy the concepts knowledge and techniques of psychology constitute the core competence the health system in all its complexity is the problem environment A health psychologist is one whose basic competence in psychology is augmented by a working knowledge of some aspect of the health system Quite apparently there are functionally distinct aspects of health psychology to the degree that there are meaningful subdivisions in psychological competence and significantly different microenvironments within the health system I hesitate to refer to them as areas of specialization as the man who gave health psychology its formal definition Joseph Matarazzo has said that there are no specialties in psychology cited in the editors preface to this book      Neurobehavioral Toxicology: Peripheral nervous system Stanley Berent,James Wilson Albers,2005 This book the first of three volumes provides a thorough background to the emerging field of neurobehavioral toxicology by looking at current clinical approaches and tests as well as assessing current clinical research The analysis of the impact of toxins on the human nervous system is particularly pertinent given the ongoing expansion of pharmaceuticals industrial

Antioxidants Harold V. Panglossi, 2006 In biological systems the normal processes of oxidation plus a minor contribution from ionising radiation produce highly reactive free radicals These can readily react with and damage other molecules In some cases the body uses free radicals to destroy foreign or unwanted objects such as in an infection However in the wrong place the body's own cells may become damaged Should the damage occur to DNA the result could be cancer Antioxidants decrease the damage done to cells by reducing oxidants before they can damage the cell Virtually all studies of mammals have concluded that a restricted calorie diet extends the life span of mammals by as much as 100 per cent This remarkable finding suggests that food is actually more damaging than smoking As food produces free radicals oxidants when metabolised antioxidant rich diets are thought to stave off the effects of aging significantly better than diets lacking in antioxidants The reduced levels of free radicals resulting from a reduction in their production by metabolism is thought to be a major cause of the success of caloric restriction in increasing life span selenium and carotenoids such as beta carotene lycopene and lutein This new book brings together the latest research in this dynamic field
