Flint and Feather E. Pauline Johnson,1967 Flint and Feather E. Pauline Johnson,2017-10-09 I cannot say how deeply it touched me to learn that Pauline Johnson expressed a wish on her death bed that I living here in the mother country all these miles away should write something about her I was not altogether surprised however for her letters to me had long ago shed a golden light upon her peculiar character She had made herself believe quite erroneously that she was largely indebted to me for her success in the literary world The letters I had from her glowed with this noble passion the delusion about her indebtedness to me in spite of all I could say never left her She continued to foster and cherish this delusion Gratitude indeed was with her not a sentiment merely as with most of us but a veritable passion And when we consider how rare a human trait true gratitude is the one particular characteristic in which the lower animals put us to shame it can easily be imagined how I was touched to find that this beautiful and grand Canadian girl remained down to the very last moment of her life the impersonation of that most precious of all virtues I have seen much of my fellow men and women and I never knew but two other people who displayed gratitude as a passion indulged in it I might say as a luxury and they were both poets I can give no higher praise to the irritable genus On this account Pauline Johnson will always figure in my memory as one of the noblest minded of the human race Flint and Feather E.
