

FLOWER PAINTING

There is everything you need to know to produce vibrant watercolours which capture the colour and beauty of your favourite flowers and plants. Clear, step-by-step instructions give guidance on every aspect of flower painting from choice of materials to special techniques which will enable you to portray the essence of your subject matter and all its glorious colour.

1 Flipping around the petals I now need to add a little detail to give the flower realism. I am using the same large brush, but this time down to a fine tip, to get in the back of the flowers together with their centres and anthers. For this I use the colour of full saturation.

2 The body of the brush has been saturated in a light yellow and the tip has been put into a stronger blue-green mix. With a slight sideways stroke, which allows the bristles to spread, I produce the start of a bud form.

3 This time I am using a finer brush where the right hand side of the brush has been dipped in yellow and the left hand side dipped in green. Using a swirling stroke I make another bud form. As the brush is a flat brush it will produce a more obvious flat stroke.

4 I now include my final details with variations in the leaves. This will help to link the whole picture together. When applying two colour brushwork a little practice may be required on a separate piece of paper to develop the skill in working from tip to body of the brush.
