Oursi Hu-beero Lucas Pieter Petit, Maya von Czerniewicz, Christoph Pelzer, 2011 This final report describes the study of an exceptionally well preserved Iron Age building discovered in northern Burkina Faso West Africa The site of Oursi hu beero meaning the big house of Oursi in the locally spoken Songhay language was excavated in 2000 and 2001 by a scientific team from the universities of Frankfurt am Main and Ouagadougou It is situated in the middle of a group of settlement mounds nearby the modern village of Oursi In the year 2000 deep erosion gullies were threatening the architectural remains on the surface which were provisionally dated to the 10th century AD Scholars from both universities saw the importance of this site and undertook immediate action But even they were not prepared for what they uncovered under only one metre of destruction debris The rich diversity of incredible finds in the 25 different rooms rendered their exposure of enormous importance for the archaeology and history of Burkina Faso Complete storage jars metal equipment wooden furniture rope and textile fragments grinding stones and charred botanical remains are only a fraction of the total assemblage of finds Although we are dealing with the results of a single occupation phase and from one building only the density of finds the preservation of the architecture and the absence of later disturbances add considerably to our understanding of daily life in this part of West Africa Up to now the limited contextual information about life in villages and towns prior to the historical periods has promoted divergent and weakly argued interpretations This volume breaks open new grounds of investigation and calls for further study Additionally the editors hope that this report will stimulate and encourage the discussion between historians and archaeologists of the fascinating West African past The current volume presents an introduction to the expedition an analysis of the site formation processes the presentation of the architectural features in depth studies of the findings and a lively account of the heritage management project that resulted in an on site museum Nine authors contributed to this rich and multifaceted final report The account of the construction intensive use violent destruction and subsequent rediscovery of the building is the enthralling subject of this volume which is richly illustrated with numerous coloured drawings photographs maps and reconstruction drawings It melds archaeological historical and environmental data into a thrilling story A story that reads like a new Crime Scene Investigation episode but happens to have been a real life tragedy in the African Sahel almost 1 000 years ago

Plants and People in the African Past Anna Maria Mercuri, A. Catherine D'Andrea, Rita Fornaciari, Alexa Höhn, 2018-07-31 There is an essential connection between humans and plants cultures and environments and this is especially evident looking at the long history of the African continent This book comprising current research in archaeobotany on Africa elucidates human adaptation and innovation with respect to the exploitation of plant resources In the long term perspective climatic changes of the environment as well as human impact have posed constant challenges to the interaction between peoples and the plants growing in different countries and latitudes This book provides an insight into overview of the manifold routes people have taken in various parts Africa in order to make a decent living from the provisions of their environment by bringing together the analyses of macroscopic and microscopic plant remains with ethnographic botanical geographical and linguistic research The numerous chapters cover almost all the continent countries and were prepared by most of the scholars who study African archaeobotany i e the complex and composite history of plant uses and environmental transformations during the Holocene The Biodiversity of African Plants Xander van der Maesen,J.M. van Medenbach de Rooy,2012-12-06 Proceedings of the XIVth AETFAT Congress 22 27 August 1994 Wageningen the Netherlands
