

THE AUTHOR

Michael Butterworth was born in Nottingham in 1958 and served as a landscape in the Royal Navy during the war. After the war he studied and taught art for some years. Then turned from drawing children's picture books to writing novels for them, quickly graduating to an adulthood. Ten years later he was managing editor of a group of women's glossy magazines. He has now given this up in favour of full time writing, which he does with a magazine on the topic. His magazine also includes a gourmet, gardens, cars, a food/beverage blog for use of a kitchen, a library, and more. Various other things he can think of.

He and his wife and two children live in a beautiful Suffolk manor house, which he has used effectively as the setting for Flowers for a Dead Witch. He lives here on a daily basis, and the setting for his highly successful picture books is also Nottingham.

VANISHING ACT

"Smooth, nicely characterized hidden murder mystery with detailed Middle Ages setting."
Monica Richardson, Observer

"A really convincing nightmare, with the scary elements and the family, sensible policeman, clearly connected with the research surrounding the horror." Oxford Mail

"A fast-paced thriller, all complete with an inspired red herring which should keep its readers in a quandary up to the final chapter." Evening Star

"The investigation unfolds like a tale of the past (and the reader) on a track tour of Middle Ages and its customs. The author obviously knows and loves them, and simple in background continues to draw a more vivid (and far better written) picture than most professional travel writers in a dozen books." Irish Press

"An ideal thriller in its own way, not and not and hidden provide the background for a current whodunit." Books and Bookmen
