The Emerging Shield Kenneth Schaffel, 2015-09-16 In the 1950s the United States Air Force led the way in building continental air defenses to protect the nation against bomber attack By the end of that decade the United States and Canada deployed a warning network of ground based radars extending from the United States southern borders to the arctic tundra a fleet of airborne early warning planes naval radar picket ships radar platforms the Texas Towers fastened to the ocean floor in the Atlantic Ocean and a civilian corps of ground observers Once warning of approaching enemy bombers had been received the military forces of the United States and Canada were prepared to unleash against the invader an arsenal of weapons that included fighter interceptors equipped with lethal air to air missiles antiaircraft artillery and short and long range surface to air missiles some nuclear tipped The whole system was coordinated through a technologically advanced computer oriented command and control system the first of its kind ever deployed The story of the rise of air defense in the United States after World War II is complex and this volume does not presume to be a complete history of the subject It focuses on the U S Air Force s predominant role in defense of the continental United States against manned bomber attacks Although the U S Army the U S Navy and the Canadian Air Force contributed resources to the mission the U S Air Force had primary responsibility for research development and deployment of most of the systems and weapons The outstanding exception was antiaircraft artillery the province of the U S Army In some respects the Army can be said to have fielded a complementary air defense system separate from that of the Air Force This book however examines the Army s part in the mission only as it concerns roles and missions controversies with the Air Force The volume begins with the U S Army Air Service s involvement with air defense in World War I and traces the story through to the late 1950s and early 1960s At that time the intercontinental ballistic missile supplanted the bomber as the most dangerous long range threat to North America precipitating a dramatic decline in bomber defenses over the next two decades A number of important themes emerge the development of technology particularly for command control and communications systems roles and missions debates interpretations and analysis of the threat and Air Force theories and approaches to offensive and defensive strategic warfare The last is by far the most pervasive theme

Information in War Benjamin M. Jensen, Christopher Whyte, Scott Cuomo, 2022-10-03 An in depth assessment of innovations in military information technology informs hypothetical outcomes for artificial intelligence adaptations In the coming decades artificial intelligence AI could revolutionize the way humans wage war The military organizations that best innovate and adapt to this AI revolution will likely gain significant advantages over their rivals To this end great powers such as the United States China and Russia are already investing in novel sensing reasoning and learning technologies that will alter how militaries plan and fight The resulting transformation could fundamentally change the character of war In Information in War Benjamin Jensen Christopher Whyte and Scott Cuomo provide a deeper understanding of the AI revolution by exploring the relationship between information organizational dynamics and military power The authors analyze how militaries adjust to new information communication technology historically to identify opportunities risks and obstacles that will almost certainly confront modern defense organizations as they pursue AI pathways to the future Information in War builds on these historical cases to frame four alternative future scenarios exploring what the AI revolution could look like in the US military by 2040 Proceedings of the USAEC First Symposium on Accelerator Radiation Dosimetry and Experience, Held at Brookhaven National Laboratory, Upton, New York, November 3-5, 1965, 1966
