An Economic History of the Silk Industry, 1830-1930 Giovanni Federico, 1997-05 An Economic History of the Silk Industry 1830 1930 first published in 1997 is an ambitious historical analysis of the development of a major commodity Dr Federico examines the rapid growth of the world silk industry from the early nineteenth century to the eve of the Great Depression of the 1930s Silk production grew as a result of Western industrialisation which in turn brought about increased incomes and thus increased demand for silk products The author documents the changes in methods of production and the technical progress that enabled the silk industry to cope with this new influx in demand Dr Federico then discusses the significant changes in the geographical distribution of world output that accompanied this growth In conclusion Federico points out that silk did indeed become the first example of a Japanese success story on the world market Italy and China both losing their markets due to Japan's large agricultural supply of raw material cocoons and its adroitness in importing and adopting Western technology patenting and social insurance 3 The emerging political regime of market preserving federalism promoted the quality of economic institutions Moreover a set of chapters dealing with the experience of other European economies apart from Germany during the second half of the nineteenth century highlight additional factors in nineteenth century economic development most notably the first wave of modern globalization and economic geography Readers interested in the history of state building and the economic history of Germany and of Europe in general during the age of industrialization and globalization and students of the economic effects of political integration and decentralized state growth will all gain much from this book
