

Emotion and social judgments

Gordon H. Bower

A. R. Lang Professor of Psychology
Stanford University

This monograph is based on a speech delivered at the Capitol Hill Science Seminar sponsored by the Federation of Behavioral, Psychological and Cognitive Sciences on 9 September 1994. Parts are adapted from an earlier article (Bower, 1983). The author's research is supported by a research grant, MH-47575, from the National Institute of Mental Health.

Published September 1995 in Washington, DC. This material is not copyrighted. Its duplication is encouraged.

The experimental setting

I will be discussing experiments in which normal volunteers, people like you or me, are induced to feel a mild emotion like happiness, sadness or anger for a brief time. We then look at how those feelings affect their memory or thinking. We make people happy, sad or angry by doing things like showing them happy or sad movies, playing happy or sad music, getting them to read or imagine happy or sad scenes, or arranging for them to succeed or fail at some task. The mood inductions are often subtle or mild, and their purpose is usually disguised. The memory or judgment tasks are then introduced as though they were a completely separate and unrelated study. We do it this way to prevent subjects from consciously biasing their responses according to their ideas about how emotion might relate to judgment. When I refer to happy or sad people in the following experiments, I will usually be referring to normal individuals (typically college students) who have been randomly assigned to experimental conditions in which they have experienced a happy or sad mood induction.

Emotion and memory

In 1976, while studying the impact of various emotional states on memory (Bower et al., 1978; Bower, 1981), I also became interested in mood effects on social judgment. Since the effects of mood on memory probably play a central role in biasing judgments, I will briefly tell you what we were learning from that research.
