Two main things make Esperanto different

Esperanto is a constructed language, meaning it was created by a person or a group of people. It is not a natural language that evolved over time. Esperanto is based on the Latin and Greek roots of many European languages, making it easy to learn for people who speak those languages. It has a simple grammar and a large vocabulary, which makes it a useful tool for communication.

Esperanto is a neutral language, meaning it does not belong to any particular nation or culture. It is designed to be a common language for people from all over the world. Esperanto is not a replacement for natural languages, but rather a supplement to them. It is a language of hope, designed to bring people from different cultures and backgrounds together.
