

SCI 1: Teaching Science in Elementary Grades (GROUP 1)

Questions:

1. What is STL?

STL means Science and Technology Literacy. Science and technology literacy refers to the ability to understand, engage with, and effectively use scientific and technological information, concepts, and processes. It goes beyond simply acquiring knowledge and encompasses the development of critical thinking, problem-solving, and decision-making skills in scientific and technological contexts.

Science literacy involves having a basic understanding of scientific concepts, principles, and methods, as well as the ability to critically evaluate scientific information and its implications. It includes the capacity to engage in scientific inquiry, ask questions, design experiments, and analyze data. Scientific literacy also involves understanding the nature of science, including its limitations, ethics, and the ways in which scientific knowledge is acquired and modified over time.

Technology literacy, on the other hand, refers to the ability to understand and use technology effectively and responsibly. It involves the knowledge and skills to navigate digital tools and devices, utilize software and applications, and adapt to technological changes. Technology literacy also encompasses the ability to think critically about technological issues, consider the ethical implications of technology, and make informed decisions about the use and adoption of technology.

Science and technology literacy are closely interconnected as they both involve understanding and engaging with scientific knowledge, technological tools, and processes. Developing science and technology literacy is crucial in today's rapidly advancing world, as it enables individuals to meaningfully participate in scientific and technological advancements, make informed decisions, and address complex societal challenges.
