

Christian Worldview on Knowledge & Truth

✓ Exclusively available on IvyPanda

There are many ways by which knowledge and truth can be found from the perspective of a biblical Christian worldview. Scientific method is one of the methods. It refers to the process by which truth is found by putting more emphasis on the reasoning and experimentation of the variables under study.

For example, it is important for human beings to understand the evolution process. It is systematic as it involves various steps to be able to obtain the truth.

An observation of nature is made. This involves identifying a given problem to be studied. The scientist then proposes an explanation for that observation. The explanation is then used to forecast or make predictions. The scientist waits to see if the prediction will be correct or not.

If the prediction has failed, then the hypothesis is rejected. The scientist has various options after this observation. He may modify the hypothesis in order to make some corrections and leave the other parts unchanged and therefore make a new prediction or reject the entire hypothesis so that a new one can be made (Otto, 1997). Many experiments should be repeated from time to time before a conclusion is finally made.

The scientist may be suspicious if he keeps on finding negative results that are not consistent with other experiments and therefore require him to keep on doing research as he cannot rely on the results to make a valid conclusion (Nigel, 2006). However, it is not always possible to obtain an absolute truth by this method because it involves so many assumptions.

The scientific method can be used as a way of seeking knowledge and truth especially by the Christians in trying to explain the existence of God who created the heavens and the earth. God has given us brains which can be used to increase our understanding of nature.

People may not understand who created the things that we are trying to experiment, but science has revealed that there is more that has that needs to be discovered. Many
