

BOURDIEU, PIERRE. The Field of Cultural Production: Essays on Art and Literature. Ed. Randal Johnson. Columbia University Press, 1993, viii + 322 pp., $40.00 cloth, $16.50 paper.

Prolific Pierre Bourdieu, French sociologist and author of more than twenty books and one hundred articles (a good many available in English), is represented here by a collection of ten essays previously published between 1968 and 1987—the majority having already appeared in English (three essays on Flaubert began as the 1986 Gauss lectures at Princeton University). Since 1984, Bourdieu is best known in the English-speaking world for his Distinction: A Social Critique of the Judgment of Taste, in which he asserted that taste classifies, and it classifies the classifier. Social subjects, classified by their classifications, distinguish themselves by the distinctions they make, between the beautiful and the ugly, the distinguished and the vulgar, in which their position in the objective classifications is expressed or betrayed. (p. 6)

Cultural practices, or what might also be called the practice of culture, consist for Bourdieu of the means by which a social system—in particular one that consists of domination—not only reproduces but also legitimizes itself. And yet for Bourdieu taste and the culture that accommodates and inspires it are neither cause nor effect of this systematic domination. He instead regards taste and the objects it valorizes as epiphenomenal symbols of a total social system, which precisely as symbols implicitly legitimize domination and also provide critical occasions for what he elsewhere calls reflexive sociology (see for example In Other Words: Essays Toward a Reflexive Sociology, 1990, and his “best-selling” study of French academic life, Homo Academicus, 1988).

In general, then, it is the practice of culture—and in particular the symbolic exchanges that occur therein—that provides Bourdieu with a reflective glass in which to discern the movements of social agents. (The supposition that culture reflects society is no less insightful than the canard that art reflects nature.) Indeed, for Bourdieu the dynamic arc of all such movements can best be plotted amidst the static coordinates of the cultural “field” in and upon which they occur. Hence, to understand the meaning of any cultural, literary, or artistic “movement” (and of course its products) requires a preliminary charting of the field where it takes place. The Field of Cultural Production attempts to provide a map of that field as well as a justification for the claim that such a map adequately accounts for all cultural landmarks and, more importantly, both the actual and potential movements that it supposedly sanctions. I take it that a crucial difference between cultural history and the science of sociology requires Bourdieu to provide something more than an account of those social structures requisite for the production of certain cultural artifacts: he must in addition offer a plausible account of cultural movements that might have happened in place of the ones that did. Bourdieu does not shy away from such sociological expectation, as for example:

One can also ... undertake a structural explanation of this art [nineteenth-century historical painting] relating it to the institutional conditions of its production: its aesthetic is inscribed (to the point that one can practically
