A Letter to a Friend

Hello, My Dear Friend,

I hope this letter finds you well and you have several minutes to read my story. During our recent conversation, you shared some concerns about your son's inability to manage his routine because of poor knowledge. I was not ready to answer you at that moment, and now, I have pulled myself together and want to believe my experience could help you find a sound solution.

Today, it is hard for most people to ignore COVID-19 and realize that their lives and choices have significantly changed. Lately, I have faced a serious problem with my daughter, Jennifer, who was not ready for the pandemic consequences and adjusting her lifestyle. On the one hand, I understand that her young age, high ambitions, and frustration with imposed social isolation and restrictions can hardly co-exist. She is an active 29-year-old college graduate who has already achieved a successful career as an Engineer in a well-known organization. She needs time and opportunities to demonstrate her skills, knowledge, and achievements. On the other hand, I thought that such attitudes and beliefs should be enough for her to learn what she must do under such unpredictable circumstances. I was stuck on whether to motivate her for something better or let her sort everything on her own.

Thus, it was the beginning of my quest for inspiration and finding appropriate reasons not to make a mistake. I tried to think of life's best moments and create several captivating associations. Our busy lives, physical activities, biking, and traveling meant a lot to our family. She seems to have forgotten everything, including pleasure, happiness, and satisfaction with a new day coming. My goal was to remind her of all those positive things that affect her future decisions and choices. I was surprised when my action plan started influencing me as well. I knew that it was impossible to neglect our age differences, but I hoped that her youth and my experience could be a beneficial duo. My intention was to inspire my daughter, but instead, I wanted to discover new joys
