

Introduction

Genetic disorders are illnesses that are caused by abnormalities in the genomes of an individual; these disorders are usually present from birth of the person and are usually inherited by being passed from the parents genes. In giving a lecture about genetic disorders, the levels of professionals that the trainees are will determine the manner in which the trainer will conduct the lectures. In addition, due to the difference in age brackets of the trainees, the speed at which they internalise the information will be different. This essay will look at the different forms of methods that are usable in training to ensure both the nursing professionals and the nursing students get all the information that the lecture on genetic disorders is intended to pass on to them (Oermann & Gaberson, 2006).

Lecture Presentation

Nurses who have been in practise for some times tend to be repellent to new ideas and discoveries in the field of genetic disorders, this is because most of the information that they are being presented with is contradictory to the information that they were taught when they were in school or that they have grown up knowing. This therefore, requires that the method that is to be used to teach the adult nurses be convincing enough to make them change their views relating to the specific disorder. This will require the use of real life cases and a lot of research statistics on the cases in order to convince them to change the views and information that they previously held. In the case of students who are pursuing a degree in nursing, accepting new information is easy as they did not have any other contradicting view or information previously. Teaching them will require just the new piece of information and the outdated information may be just for history purposes to show the evolution of information on the subject of genetic disorders.

Ralph Waldo Emerson: Essays and Lectures (LOA #15) Ralph Waldo Emerson, 1983-11-15 Our most eloquent champion of individualism Emerson acknowledges at the same time the countervailing pressures of society in American life Even as he extols what he called the great and creative self he dramatizes and records its vicissitudes Here are all the indispensable and most renowned works including The American Scholar our intellectual Declaration of Independence as Oliver Wendell Holmes called it The Divinity School Address considered atheistic by many of his listeners the summons to Self Reliance along with the more embattled realizations of Circles and especially Experience Here too are his wide ranging portraits of Montaigne Shakespeare and other representative men and his astute observations on the habits lives and prospects of the English and American people This volume includes Emerson's well known Nature Addresses and Lectures 1849 his Essays First Series 1841 and Essays Second Series 1844 plus Representative Men 1850 English Traits 1856 and his later book of essays The Conduct of Life 1860 These are the works that established Emerson's colossal reputation in America and found him admirers abroad as diverse as Carlyle Nietzsche and Proust The reasons for Emerson's influence and durability will be obvious to any reader who follows the exhilarating exploratory movements of his mind in this uniquely full gathering of his work Not merely another selection of his essays this volume includes all his major books in their rich entirety No other volume conveys so comprehensively the exhilaration and exploratory energy of perhaps America's greatest writer
