Escape from Phalaris Frank Hazard, 2008-05-12 The title as well as the thematic impetus of ESCAPE FROM PHALARIS are derived from the legend of Perilaus and Phalaris as related by the ancient Greek satirist Lucian Perilaus a gifted sculptor created for Phalaris tyrant of Agrigentum an ornate bronze bull reputed to be a magnificent work of art into which was carved a secret chamber in which the tyrant imprisoned hapless victims And victims when flames were ignited underneath the statue inside were roasted to death as their shrieks of agony were transformed into dulcet music through ancillary pipes attached to the beautiful statue The first victim whom the tyrant Phalaris tortured was Perilaus the artist ESCAPE FROM PHALARIS comprises a deft and original concept of art and creative impulse examining among other eminent themes the necessity of the solitary artist to transcend minatory environmental inhibitions to escape as it were from Phalaris that impede or negate his own profound freedom and purpose affirmed in the distant chance of artistic achievement The book is divided into three parts Part One comprises twenty sections of varied length including meditations a dialogue and analysis and establishes essential questions and themes addressed and elaborated and fulfilled in the ensuing narrative For instance the dialogue in Section 12 is a complete autonomous statement in itself but it is also continued and developed in Part Three Section 7 which is also a complete and autonomous statement in itself Themes addressed in Part One include the fundamental and questionable validity of critical analysis of art and evaluations of time history authenticity and inauthenticity science aesthetic choice and compulsion elaborated both analytically and among vivid poetic impressions that establish mood and raise questions and ideas and themes which again the overall narrative fulfills Part Two consists of fourteen sections and it comprises a bridge mostly but not exclusively analytic that unites Part One and Part Three although Part Two also is of course an autonomous independent statement of its own unified by themes including evaluations of aesthetic consciousness intrepid analyses of journalistic and pedagogical criticism of art a description of the Perilaus Phalaris story from which the title of the book is derived and the ardent spiritual and psychological processes out of which a solitary creator devises his art Part Three comprises seventeen sections of varied length including meditations a dialogue and
