✓ Exclusively available on IvyPanda

This study examines the historical developments in medieval London, the ceremonies practiced then and the roles these ceremonies played in overall the social setting.

London's ceremonies were a major tourist attraction. Its court tradition and processions, offered a chance for people to enjoy a real glimpse into the spectacle of pageantry and the sight of ancient traditions that have survived the brunt of time. Through the various ceremonies, 'outsiders' were able to understand the social relations of the urban class and family patterns that were displayed then. In these, the different social networks and strata were evident.

Court pageantry was most visible in the ceremonial entries, weddings and meetings, which were celebrated with extravagant decorations and grand civic tournaments. As a result the ceremonies stimulated growth of local crafts industries, such as the metalwork industry for production of armors and weapons; stone sculpture
