

Moral Philosophy Essay

Moral philosophy is that branch of philosophy which shows the difference between what is good and bad, right and wrong in life. Moral philosophy is basically refers to goodness and rightness. The concept of morality tends to be different in different religion and culture. For example in Hindu culture, if a person is eating beef then he is consider to be immoral in society but it is normal or people do not judge you if you eating beef in Canada or somewhere else. So it can be say that different religion follow different rule of morality. Ethics is sub part of morality. Sometimes these words used as synonyms for each other's. Sophocles (496-406 BC) is the first one who speaks about the morality in the ancient times. In his 'Antigone' he answer the various questions of morality relating in connections, obligations to family, political dependability, accommodation to divine directive, energetic selflessness and paternalism and a regard culture. Later the concept of moral philosophy also discuss in broad term by SOCRATES (469-399) BC

Epistemology

The word epistemology consists of two Greek words "episteme" which means knowledge and second one is "logos" which meaning, roughly, "study, or science, of Epistemology is primarily 'concerned with standards of acceptability in terms of which to judge beliefs' (Stewart, et. al., Fundamentals, 167). Epistemology is the investigation of information. Epistemologists fret about various errands, which we may sort into two classifications.

Initially, we should decide the idea of information; that is, I don\'t get its meaning to state that somebody knows, or neglects to know, something? This involves understanding what information is, and how to recognize cases in which somebody knows something and cases in which somebody doesn\'t know something. While there is some broad understanding about certain parts of this issue, we will see that this inquiry is considerably more difficult than one may be able to expect.

Second, we should decide the degree of human information; that is, what amount does we, or can we, know? How might we utilize our explanation, our faculties, the declaration of others, and different assets to obtain information? Are there cutoff points to what we can know? For example, ar
