

Modern Europe History: The Age of Empire by Eric Hobsbawm

✓ Exclusively available on IvyPanda

History of modern Europe

Hobsbawm divides the ancient historians into two distinct categories in his book; The Age of Empire. He says that quite a number of historians who lived during the 19th century can be classified into two classes while excluding the purely pieces of literature written by them.

These two classes comprise of the forward and backward lookers. According to my opinion, Hobsbawm fits in the category of backward lookers. This is because he focuses his pieces of writing in the ancient eras. He indulges in the excavation of human irrecoverable pasts.

Additionally, he is nostalgic about some historical documents including his own past experiences. He states that he and many other historians like him are still passionately associated with some ancient periods because of their undeniable 'breaks' (Hobsbawm, 6).

The bourgeois capitalism, which is characterized by the perception of dual revolution, championed productive systems that lacked limits. This then led to the take-over of the earth by the capitalist economy. Hobsbawm indicates that the economy of the bourgeois society was literally unproblematic in the 19th century.

This was because their triumph had a deeply rooted positive impact on their economy. The many political hostilities of that period, from which the French revolution had emerged, were suppressed.

To some extent, it seemed like the rebellion was gradually accepting the cultural, economic and organizational domination by the victors. As a result of the Age of Revolution, which occurred in the mid of 19th century, there were only countable socialists in the continent.
