

makers. In the political model, the agenda setting occurs when the public support is gained for an issue. (Cobb & Elder, 1983; Kingdon, 1984; Baumgartner & Jones, 1993 as cited in Dery 2000).

Several ideas generated by policy analysts, researchers, and others have become trends as these have been integrated into thinking and policy making (Barold 2005). Evaluation of a policy brings necessary changes, if required. For e.g. many public housing developments, especially in cities, were originally designed and built to accommodate large numbers of households. The problems to residents in such houses brought attention to the design of public housing developments. It was also realised that the return of policy responsibilities to state and local governments from the central government would offer more suitable policy framing to the local needs. The ill effects of the concentration of poverty developed as observed by public officials and policy scholars. The minorities and poor were shifted to white areas. It is an example where significant amount of public policy attention is aimed at reducing the concentration of poverty (Goetz, 2002 as cited in Barold 2005).

Barold (2005) refers (Lieberman 2002) that while framing or changing a policy equal importance to ideas and institutions should be given. He thinks ideas are 'roadmap' to framing a policy. The pioneer in agenda setting study, Kingdon (1995) states that agenda could be defined as the most aggravated problem of the moment and alternative as policy options capable of solving it. He further elaborates that agenda and policy options arise by the interaction of three elements i.e. Problem, policy and politics. The social groups and politicians to mobilize system in favour of a specific issue use these three elements. The policy issues generally come to the notice of bureaucrats, elected politicians and public through statistical data, wide protests or feedback of previous policies. Of the three interacting elements of policy framing, the policy stream contacts policy experts working for academic institutions, governmental agencies and interest groups related to the concerned policy field who propose legislation and alternatives. The political stream ensures that the proposals receive the direct backing of a major political advocate, usually the ruling government. The role of this third element (politics) is crucial in determining policy.

Essays On Housing Policy:

Essays on Housing Policy J. B. Cullingworth, 2021-03-23 Originally published in 1979 these essays provide a guide to the labyrinth of issues which together made up housing policy in the late 20th Century The focus is on the practical and political difficulties of devising measures which meet policy objectives difficulties which are just as prevalent in the 21st Century The search for comprehensive strategies is shown to be a vain one given the number of relevant issues and their complexity only an incremental approach is practicable Major issues are discussed in the context of an analysis of the institutional historical and financial framework within which housing policy is formulated and operated Essays on Housing Policy J. Affordable Housing and Public Policy Chicago Assembly, 1993 Monthly Catalogue, United States Public Documents, 1979 Housing in the Seventies, 1976 The Housing Problem Michael Arthur Goldberg, 1983 Thinking on Housing Peter King, 2017-02-17 If we do stop to think on housing what do we see What is housing and what does it do These seem deceptively simple questions but they are often left unanswered The reason for this is that a lot of discourse on housing is really a concern for policy making and the critical evaluation of existing policies Discourse is not properly speaking on housing at all It is concerned with provision distribution and access but this thinking on housing stops at the front door It is only concerned with what is actually external to housing But for most people housing already exists and they have access to it Housing is not then about policy but about how we can use what is a complex object in a manner that allows us to live well Housing for most of us is about what we do when the front door is firmly shut and we are free from the external world These essays explore this idea of housing as an object that exists for use Housing is pictured as an object that contains activity These pieces look at what we do with housing once we have it and so provides a necessary underpinning for any understanding of why housing is important A further purpose of these pieces is to present different ways of thinking and writing on housing It is an attempt to show that housing is a suitable topic for philosophical discourse It is suggested that we can and should seek to establish a philosophy of housing rather than just relying on the traditional social sciences
