Process Techniques for Engineering High-Performance Materials Tim Oberle,2013-06-19 Most processed materials retain a memory of their production process at the molecular level Subtle changes in production such as variations in temperature or the presence of impurities can impart performance benefits or drawbacks to individual batches of products

Some product developers have taken advantage of this process dependency to tailor products to specific markets. This is a common practice in the software industry, where products are often customized to meet the needs of different customer segments. This process is often referred to as "product differentiation" or "market segmentation".
