J. Rath, 2014-12-25 Example in this ebook CHAPTER I SAM THE BOAT PERSON Miss Chalmers stood on the wharf at Clayton poised upon one foot while she employed the other in executing alternate tap taps denoting impatience and vigorous stamping by which she registered rage Even the half grown boy who had volunteered to find her a boatman knew that she was angry Her free foot beat upon the rough flooring of the wharf with increasing vigor The wharf did not care it was old and stout and did not pretend to be ornamental Miss Chalmers s shoe might have protested had it possessed a voice for it was new and spotless and of delicate constitution With its mate it had cost Miss Chalmers twenty dollars a fact which is set down to obviate the necessity of describing what else the lady wore Her whole costume was in complete financial and artistic harmony with its twenty dollar shoe foundation It was dark and clear and warm somewhat after nine o clock of an August night There were gleams of light upon the St Lawrence some in motion some merely shimmering restlessly as they lay fixed upon the rippling surface It was an evening for poetry and romance and beauty if only the last steamer had not departed The boy came back and confirmed his previous impression that no other boat would stop that night at Witherbee s Island It s absurd inexcusable exclaimed Miss Chalmers sharply Yes ma am said the boy How am I to get there then Well Answer I got a man who ll take you Where is he Down that way replied the boy nodding his head toward the end of the wharf A reliable man Yes ma am You know him No ma am Miss Chalmers stamped her foot again How can you say he s reliable if you don't know him she demanded so imperatively that the boy winced and shuffled his feet Well he s got a power boat and his name s Sam said the boy defensively He ain t ever been wrecked s fur as I know Miss Chalmers made an eloquent and helpless gesture with both arms then surveyed her light field equipment six trunks and a grip Show me the man she spoke abruptly The boy made off in haste with Miss Chalmers at his heels He led the way among bales and boxes and barrels stopping presently under a dim oil lantern set upon a post On the string piece of the wharf sat a man smoking a pipe He looked up at Miss Chalmers casually yet speculatively then arose and nodded amicably Looking for me he asked Miss Chalmers was annoyed at the phrasing never yet had she looked for a man But she swallowed her annoyance I must go to Mr Stephen Witherbee s island to night she said Yes ma am You know where it is Oh yes How far is it Something like fifteen miles Can you take me there at once Well said the man removing his pipe from his mouth and regarding Miss Chalmers with solemn interest it all depends on what you call at once I can take you there but I m no speed king Take me then exclaimed Miss Chalmers And get my trunks The man went up the wharf at a leisurely gait accompanied by the boy Almost immediately the boy came back He says he can t take all them trunks and for you to pick out two Miss Chalmers strode back to her trunks with no improvement of temper She found the boatman surveying them placidly Which is the emergency kit he asked pleasantly I m not running a freighter ma am They ve all got to go every one To be continue in this ebook
