Abstract

The study investigated principals' implementation of quality assurance standards and administrative effectiveness in public secondary schools in Edo and Delta States. To guide the study, four research questions and hypotheses were raised. Descriptive research design was adopted for the study and the simple random sampling technique was used to select 240 principals and 720 teachers used for the study. Two set of instrument were used to collect data which was analysed using the Mean, Percentage, Pearson's Product Moment Correlation (r), Zero Differentiation Hypothesis and Fisher's statistical tools. The findings revealed that though not all quality assurance standards in Edo and Delta public secondary schools were implemented, the level of principals' administrative effectiveness is high and experience significantly contributed to their performance. It was thus recommended that, principals be empowered to implement quality assurance standards and experience should be major criteria for appointing principals so that quality assurance standards can be effectively implemented.

1. Introduction

Education is an imperative instrument and a basic force used for determining the development of any nation (Imogie, 2014). It entails the totality of all skills, competences, attitudes and values which an individual acquires over time for survival and development of the society. It can therefore be deduced that the goal, orientation, quality and content of the educational system opted for by any country is a crucial determinant of the direction of its national development and the pace of such development. Consequently, the priority of education policy of government in Nigeria at all levels is to ensure equitable access and improvement in quality and efficiency. This is guided by the principle that good education can contribute significantly to economic growth and income generating opportunities for sustainable development. The desire 'to ensure quality control through regular and continuous supervision of instructional and other educational services' (FRN, 2004:56), led to the institutionalization of a viable quality assurance approach that would be functional and be able to meet global standards. This can be achieved through effective supervision involving internal and external assessment of performance using the same instrument to ensure excellence. It therefore means that there is a standard set and a process put in place to verify and determine whether products or services meet or exceed customer expectation, customer in this context being students; this is the kernel of quality assurance.

The Principal as an administrative leader and implementer of education policies in the secondary school must continually strive to satisfy recipients of the system to ensure that quality is attained in all its' ramifications. He is saddled with the responsibility of providing leadership that will enhance quality teaching and learning which is geared towards the actualization of organizational goals and having an effective school. An effective school administrator is an even greater asset since he deals with young people on the one hand and adults on the other, thus providing an effective seamless link between the school community and individuals which ultimately determines the
