Fading Feast Raymond Sokolov, 2005-07 In the early 1980s on a mission for the American Museum of Natural History Sokolov criss crossed America in search of traditional regional cuisines He returned with a cornucopia of recipes that few at the time seemed eager to maintain recipes such as Cajun boudin blanc persimmon fudge the makings of a traditional clam bake The result Fading Feast was meant to serve as a preservation of these vanishing quintessentially American foods Since its first publication however the book has proven to be not a fond farewell but rather the forerunner of reawakened interest in these edible treasures As timely savory today this edition features 11 essays not included in the original edition Black white drawings

Fading Feast Raymond A. Sokolov, 1998 In the early 1980s on assignment from the American Museum of Natural History Raymond Sokolov crisscrossed America in search of traditional regional cuisines He returned with a cornucopia of recipes that few at the time seemed eager to preserve recipes such as boudin blanc persimmon fudge and for the truly adventurous roast bear paws The essays here collected were meant to celebrate these vanishing quintessentially American foods Since its first publication however Fading Feast has proven to be not a farewell but the forerunner of renewed interest in these regional treasures Written with panache and gusto and featuring eleven essays not included in the original version this new edition is as timely and entertaining now as when Sokolov first set out to record our native culinary customs

Fading Feast Raymond A. Sokolov, 1983 Why We Eat What We Eat Raymond A. Sokolov, 1993 When Christopher Columbus stumbled upon America in 1492 the Italians had no pasta with tomato sauce the Chinese had no spicy Szechuan cuisine and the Aztecs in Mexico were eating tacos filled with live insects instead of beef In this lively always surprising history of the world through a gourmet's eyes Raymond Sokolov explains how all of us Europeans Americans Africans and Asians came to eat what we eat today He journeys with the reader to far flung ports of the former Spanish empire in search of the points where the menus of two hemispheres merged In the process he shows that our idea of traditional cuisine in contrast to today's inventive new dishes ignores the food revolution that has been going on for the last 500 years Why We Eat What We Eat is an exploration of the astonishing changes in the world's tastes that let us partake in a delightful and edifying feast for the mind Publisher's description

Regional American Food Culture Lucy M. Long, 2009-10-13 Regional American food culture still exists and is strongest in more rural homogenous areas of the country Regional foods are a major component of regional identities and Americans make a big deal about their home grown favorites The current food cultures of the major American regions northeast New England the Mid Atlantic the South the West the Midwest and subregions are illuminated here like never before Everyone knows something about the iconic fare of a region such as Soul Food in the South and New England clam bakes but with this resource readers are able to delve wider and deeper into how Americans from Alaska to Hawaii to the Amish country of the Midwest to the Eastern Seaboard sustain themselves and what their food lifestyles are today The unique regional food cultures that have developed according to natural resources and population are increasingly affected by social and economic trends Increasingly mobile Americans generally have access to the same fast food and supermarket chain offerings read the same mass market food magazines and watch the cable food shows and younger generations may have less time to continue family food traditions such as baking the ethnic breads and desserts that their mothers did Regional American Food Culture discusses the various traditions within the context of a new millennium Narrative chapters describe the background of the regional food culture what the primary foods are how the food is cooked and by whom what the typical meals are how food is used in special occasions and diet and health issues in the regions A chronology resource guide selected bibliography and illustrations complement the text
