Fairy Legends and Traditions of the South of Ireland Thomas Croker, 2025-07-28 Reprint of the original first published in 1838 The Antigonos publishing house specialises in the publication of reprints of historical books We make sure that these works are made available to the public in good condition in order to preserve their cultural heritage Fairy Legends and Traditions of the South of Ireland, 1828 Fairy Legends and Traditions of the South of Ireland Thomas Crofton Croker, 1834-01-01 In Tipperary is one of the most singularly shaped hills in the world It has got a peak at the top like a conical nightcap thrown carelessly over your head as you awake in the morning On the very point is built a sort of lodge where in the summer the lady who built it and her friends used to go on parties of pleasure but that was long after the days of the fairies and it is I believe now deserted But before lodge was built or acre sown there was close to the head of this hill a large pasturage where a herdsman spent his days and nights among the herd The spot had been an old fairy ground and the good people were angry that the scene of their light and airy gambols should be trampled by the rude hoofs of bulls and cows The lowing of the cattle sounded sad in their ears and the chief of the fairies of the hill determined in person to drive away the new comers and the way she thought of was this When the harvest nights came on and the moon shone bright and brilliant over the hill and the cattle were lying down hushed and quiet and the herdsman wrapt in his mantle was musing with his heart gladdened by the glorious company of the stars twinkling above him she would come and dance before him now in one shape now in another but all ugly and frightful to behold One time she would be a great horse with the wings of an eagle and a tail like a dragon hissing loud and spitting fire Then in a moment she would change into a little man lame of a leg with a bull's head and a lambent flame playing round it Then into a great ape with duck's feet and a turkey cock's tail But I should be all day about it were I to tell you all the shapes she took And then she would roar or neigh or hiss or bellow or howl or hoot as never yet was roaring neighing hissing bellowing howling or hooting heard in this world before or since The poor herdsman would cover his face and call on all the saints for help but it was no use With one puff of her breath she would blow away the fold of his great coat let him hold it never so tightly over his eyes and not a saint in heaven paid him the slightest attention And to make matters worse he never could stir no nor even shut his eyes but there was obliged to stay held by what power he knew not gazing at these terrible sights until the hair of his head would lift his hat half a foot over his crown and his teeth would be ready to fall out from chattering But the cattle would scamper about mad as if they were bitten by the fly and this would last until the sun rose over the hill The poor cattle from want of rest were pining away and food did them no good besides they met with accidents without end Never a night passed that some of them did not fall into a pit and get maimed or may be killed Some would tumble into a river and be drowned in a word there seemed never to be an end of the accidents But what made the matter worse there could not be a herdsman got to tend the cattle by night One visit from the fairy drove the stoutest hearted almost mad The owner of the ground did not know what to do He offered double treble quadruple wages but not a man could be found for the sake of money to go through the horror of facing the fairy She rejoiced at the successful issue of her project and continued her pranks The herd gradually thinning and no man daring to remain on the ground the fairies came back in numbers and gambolled as merrily as before quaffing dew drops from acorns and spreading their feast on the heads of capacious mushrooms Fairy Legends and Traditions Thomas Crofton Croker, 2004-06 IT is said by those who ought to understand such things that the good people or the fairies are some of the angels who were turned out of heaven and who landed on their feet in this world while the rest of their companions who had more sin to sink them went down further to a worse place Fairy Legends and Traditions of the South of Ireland T.
