

A FACTOR ANALYTIC STUDY OF THE TWELVE ITEM GENERAL HEALTH QUESTIONNAIRE*

by A. WORSLEY and C. C. GRIBBIN

INTRODUCTION

Since it was introduced in 1971, Goldberg's General Health Questionnaire (GHQ) has been used by many workers in studies of the prevalence of psychiatric morbidity (e.g. Goldberg, 1971, Ballinger, 1975, Worsley, Walters and Wood, 1977a). Several investigators however have found the sixty item version too long for their purposes (e.g. community surveys) and have used the shorter versions instead, (e.g. the thirty item version: Goldberg, Rickels, Downing and Hesbacher (1976), or the twelve item version: e.g. Burvill (1975), Goldberg (1972), Tennant and Andrews (1976)).

These versions of the GHQ are scored in such a way that each respondent can be classified as either a "probable psychiatric case" or a "probable non-case". However, apart from this Bayesian relationship with non-psychotic psychiatric disturbance the factors which contribute to the overall score of each respondent are not clearly understood.

The sixty item GHQ was the subject of a principal component analysis by Goldberg (1972) and of a principal factors analysis by Worsley, Walters and Wood (1977b). Both studies have shown that several factors, including a major 'general disturbance factor' are measured by the GHQ. Similar findings emerged from a principal components analysis of the thirty item version (Goldberg et al 1976). (See Table 1). The twelve item version on the other hand has not been factor-analysed. Thus the aim of the present study was to carry out a factor analysis of the 12 item GHQ and to examine whether or not any emergent factors were related to those derived from the sixty item version.

METHOD

The twelve item GHQ was completed by 603 householders after they had been approached by interviewers calling at their homes. The respondents were selected on a random basis from two sources: (1) one sample was drawn up from respondents about to move house matched by households five doors away; and (2) rental companies' lists of tenants. The survey took place in two areas of Australia:

- (a) Melbourne metropolitan area;
- (b) Mining towns in North West Australia.

Approximately half of the respondents lived in each of these two areas.

RESULTS

Three significant factors emerged from the combined factor analysis (Table 2). The loadings of the items on these factors are shown in Table 3 (expressed as whole numbers). Only loadings equal to or greater than 35 are regarded as significant (Overall and Klett, 1972).

From Table 3 it can be seen that the items which loaded on Factor 1 were mainly to do with unhappiness or lack of enjoyment and sleep disturb-
