The Impact of a Faith Community Nursing Program on a Culturally Diverse Community Cynthia I. Shores, 2011 The purposes of this study were to examine the impact of a faith community nursing program on a culturally diverse community and to identify nursing interventions that faith community nurses use in their specialized practice with individuals families groups communities and society This study based on Roy's Adaptation Model used a qualitative design to assess the impact of a faith community nursing program. Questionnaires with open ended questions were mailed to 112 faith community members, clergy representatives and faith community nurses with 46% (n = 52) returned. Responses were analyzed with content analysis. Findings indicated that this faith community nursing program had many positive health, social, educational, cultural, financial and spiritual benefits in the lives of culturally diverse people in the faith community and in the greater community. Participants reported living healthier, helping others, increasing and sharing knowledge, using culturally appropriate behaviors, saving money, experiencing increased hope, comfort and inspiration, and achieving balance between physical and spiritual health. The description of the program impact was complemented by over 90 nursing interventions that faith community nurses use in their practice. Faith community nurses facilitated holistic health care, promoted health and well being, and helped prevent or minimize illnesses as they ministered to culturally diverse populations. The faith community nurses associated with this nursing program had multiple opportunities to reduce health disparities in vulnerable, underserved, minority and at risk populations through innovative, collaborative and economical strategies while simultaneously and intentionally focusing on spiritual care. Implications for nursing practice, education and research were presented.

Faith Community Nursing, 2017 This new edition of Faith Community Nursing: Scope and Standards of Practice addresses the essential aspects of Faith Community Nurse practice. It completely updates the 2012 edition reflecting the complex requirements and changes that underlay faith community nursing, health care and the nursing profession as well as their enduring components and qualities. Continuing and building on more than a decade of collaboration, Health Ministries Association Inc and American Nurses Association have again published an authoritative, concise and practical resource. To do so, the two groups convened

The Lived Experience of Faith Community Nurses Living the Call to Health Ministry Deborah Mobley, 2010 Faith community nursing is one of the newest specialized practices of professional nursing. A faith community nurse is an actively registered professional nurse who serves as a paid or volunteer staff member in a faith community. The faith community nurse promotes health and wholeness of the faith community, its groups, families and individual members. A faith community, as in a church, synagogue or mosque, is an organization of individuals and families who share common beliefs, values, religious doctrine and faith practices that influence their lives. The faith community functions as a client system for the faith community nurse. The purpose of this study was to gain an understanding of the experiences of Protestant faith community nurses living the call to health ministry. Previous researchers have explored the roles of the faith community nurse but have not specifically investigated the experience of living the call. A hermeneutical phenomenological methodology was used to answer the question: What is the lived experience of faith community nurses living the call to health ministry? The participants were ten Caucasian female faith community nurses residing in four regions in the Commonwealth of Virginia. All participants acknowledged receiving a call to health ministry. A structured interview of 60 to 90 minutes was conducted with each participant The interview consisted of structured and semi structured questions and explored the meaning of living the call to health ministry Data were analyzed using the phenomenological method of Max van Manen Five themes emerged including 1 the calling 2 relating to God in living the call 3 practice in living the call 4 challenges in living the call and 5 blessings in living the call Participants described the experiences of the callings to health ministry consistent communications with God and the challenges and blessings of faith community nursing The practices of faith community nurses were also described by the participants The findings provide a glimpse into the lifeworld of the faith community nurse living the call to health ministry This study may be helpful to others wanting to gain a deeper understanding of the meaning of the calling to health ministry as well as the experiences of relating to God practice challenges and blessings

Transforming Lives Alexander Rödlach,2020-07-23 Faith community nursing and health ministry programs in congregations have increasingly been recognized as having a significant impact on the health and well being of individuals Based on a case study in Omaha Nebraska Transforming Lives Health Initiatives in Faith Communities documents how nurses and health ministers touch and transform the recipients of their services and the participants in activities they organize Alexander R dlach argues that much of their success is due to their ability to collaborate with leadership in congregations and health systems These programs have the potential to become significant partners with health systems and governments in providing health services to communities Faith Community Nursing Janet Susan Hickman,2013

Edition American Nurses Association,Health Ministries Association,2024-06-10 An Examination of Faith Community Nursing Interventions in the Promotion of Successful Aging Lina Hixson,2016 Background Faith Community Nursing is a specialty nursing practice providing ongoing supportive health care to community dwellers of all ages Practicing within the context of a community of faith these nurses focus on health promotion and disease prevention using their expertise to combine spiritual and physical dimensions of care As the population of Americans continues to age at a rapid rate the number of older adults is expected to more than double by the year 2060. Many older individuals live with one or more chronic diseases; however, living with a chronic disease does not always require inpatient or home care services. Therefore, other strategies to maintain health despite chronic disease are needed. Recent research has been conducted on the range of interventions provided by Faith Community Nurses (FCNs). What is less known is how FCNs are contributing to the health and well-being of community-dwelling older adults in the support of successful aging. Purpose: The purpose of this study was to describe ways in which FCNs contribute to the health and well-being of older adults to successful aging as well as identify gaps in supportive health care to serve this growing population. Methods: To examine interventions provided by FCNs with a specific focus on older adults, a secondary analysis of data from the Henry Ford Health System Faith Community Nursing Health Ministries Documentation and Reporting System was conducted. Descriptive statistics were used to analyze the distribution of interventions across age groups, and then data was filtered into two distinct age groupings: 0-65 years and 66 years and older, to focus on interventions specifically involving older adults. Data from the 66 years and older age group was then mapped to the multidimensional model of successful aging to reveal how FCNs contribute to the health and well-being of older adults. Results: Across all age groups, FCNs are promoting health. Large numbers of people are participating in education and support group activities. Nutrition education and healthy lifestyle support groups are two of the most frequently attended group activities. However, when examining group activities for older adults, there appears to be no specific education or support group focused on the 66 years and older age group. The spiritual aspect of care begins to emerge as a support group activity for all ages, and the unique specialty of Faith Community Nursing starts to become more evident in individual interventions. Here, individual intervention contacts with older adults more than double compared to the 0-65 age group, and the intervention of active listening becomes the primary focus. One of the unique features of Faith Community Nursing practice is lack of time constraints for interactions with clients, as well as the spiritual aspect of care. When mapped to the model domains, a cluster of group and individual interventions do align with the multidimensional model of successful aging, suggesting FCNs are contributing to the health and well-being of older adults. Conclusion: Considering more than half of the clients seen by FCNs in this study were age 66 and older, there does not exist a clear delineation of education and support group activities specifically for older adults. Greater effort could be put forth in promoting physical and mental health for this age group, as well as providing opportunities for social interaction exposure. This study informs and advances research in this specialty practice. It also highlights the contributions FCNs are making to promote health and prevent disease for all age groups. Findings from this study provide recommendations to simplify electronic documentation to improve precision for future analysis and the need for greater care coordination between FCNs and nurse navigators. Further research on the linkage between Faith Community Nursing interventions and outcomes for persons with chronic disease is needed.

Perceived Effects of Faith Community Nursing on Quality of Life and Overall Health Renee Rutherford, 2019 Faith

Community Nursing FCN is a nursing practice specialty that focuses on the intentional care of the spirit the promotion of an integrative model of health and the prevention and minimization of illness The FCN nursing specialty is believed to be an effective specialty to reverse the trend for declining health by aiding in the improvement of quality of life QoL and overall health for increasing numbers of people with multiple health problems however minimal research data and literature was available to substantiate the claim This MSN thesis explored the relationship between FCN ministries and QoL and health by conducting a retrospective qualitative study A purposive sample of FCNs was chosen initially and expanded by a networking sample of parishioners referred by FCNs Participants were interviewed and data was analyzed for common themes The Theoretical Model of FCN was used as a guide which allowed for comparison of retrospective data and aided in identifying and organizing common themes in pursuit of wholistic care which includes faith integration and incorporates health promotion disease management coordination empowerment and access to care A perceived positive impact of FCN ministries on QoL and health was manifest throughout the interviews This information may be beneficial to expand FCN as a nursing practice and may benefit all nurses by improving understanding concerning the impact of spiritual care on QoL and health
