INTRODUCTION

Circumcision is the surgical removal of the prepuce (foreskin) either in whole or in part. Various method of circumcision including several devices has been described. These methods can be grouped into three: shield and clamp, dorsal slit and rubber. Complications such as bleeding, infection, loss of skin, wound dehiscence, trapped penis, redundant skin, preputial adhesion, meatal stenosis, urethrostenosis/fistula, glansular necrosis and glansular amputation have been reported. In our case, there was a penile shaft skin loss following circumcision with smart clamp device. The loss of penile shaft skin required extensive coverage as a reconstructive procedure. Split thickness skin graft were performed chosen for the extensive coverage of the penile shaft in this case.

CASE REPORT

A 4 years old Malay boy with medical background of autistic spectrum disorder, presented with bleeding from the penile shaft. He underwent ritual circumcision using smart clamp method at private clinic 3 days prior to presentation. The bleeding occurred after the clamp was removed on the day of presentation. There was minimal bleeding from the base of penis with loss of penile shaft skin.

Examination under anaesthesia was carried out on the same day of presentation for him and intraoperative finding noted loss of penile shaft skin. Patient was underwent wound debridement and split thickness skin graft (STSG). This was harvested from the medial aspect of thigh with an electric dermatome. Grafted skin was attached over the penile shaft with interrupted absorbable sutures and covered with "dy-sorb" bolster dressing. Wound inspection done at post operation day 7 and revealed the skin graft take was 100%. Subsequent follow up was successful with good cosmetic and functional outcome.

DISCUSSION

Circumcision using Smart Clamp method is gaining popularity because it is relatively easy and fast. In our case, the loss of penile shaft skin needs to be treated properly to prevent bad scarring and penile shaft contracture. There are various methods to reconstruct the loss of penile shaft skin such as split thickness skin graft (STSG), full thickness skin graft (FTSG), dermal matrices and local flap. Our patient suffered almost entire circumferential loss of skin over his penile shaft. STSG is preferred for reconstruction in penile shaft skin loss when the area involved is large. FTSG usually provide more aesthetically better outcome but the donor site is limited. In our case STSG is more feasible option. Furthermore STSG have lower incidence of graft failure and broader range of application than FTSG. STSG also provide a faster wound healing compared to FTSG. In this case, the loss of penile shaft skin was successfully repaired with STSG with good cosmetic and functional outcome.

CONCLUSION

Split thickness skin graft may serve as effective tool to provide extensive coverage in the management of the penile shaft skin defect following complication of ritual circumcision using smart clamp method. STSG provide a reliable extensive coverage with good cosmetic and functional outcome.
