

AN EPILOGUE, &c.

PERIOD I.

FROM THE BEGINNING TO THE FALL OF JERUSALEM.

CHAPTER I.

PERIOD I.

THE WORLD, the theatre of the most wonderful divine operations, has been in existence 3,000 years. The learned Aristotle supposed the world, in its organized form, eternal; and that the Supreme Being put it in motion. Anaxagoras, followed by Democritus and Plato, believed in a Supreme Being who animated the world out of matter, which always existed, yet held it in a suspended state by his power, which propelled and regulated the organized system. Epicurus, the father of Atheism, taught the fortuitous union of the earth and all its inhabitants and productions to a fortuitous concurrence of atoms. No man in Greece or Rome ever acknowledged a Creator of the world. The old Heathen nations, ignorant of their origin, were fond of attributing to themselves such ancestry. The Babylonians and Egyptians boasted of their unnumbered ancestors and traced their descent through thirty and forty thousand years. The modern Chinese and Hindoos make similar pretensions.

From dust and clay
The world came, and, from the clays there,
Formed a region for which they have
Thus far who made it, and extended its date
To three, was number to its age."
