

WHAT'S TRADING IN French-speaking Africa?

From EIF and partners, where trade support to least developed countries is going – and where it's needed

Francophone least developed countries (LDCs)

 AfricCommerce

HIGH-VALUE AGRICULTURE

Local communities throughout the African continent are cultivating diverse agricultural items with a lot of trade potential – beyond the usual major commodities. Yang-yang, shea, pineapple, honey and sesame, for example, when processed, packaged and exported, help small farmers earn more income and cater to increasing global demand. But, more support is needed.

TOURISM

COVID-19 is exposing the vulnerabilities inherent in reliance on tourism dollars, and LDCs saw their tourist arrivals plunge by 67% in 2020. Yet, the crisis is opening up possibilities for a new and improved tourism trade that better nurtures local livelihoods and the environment. Many LDCs have a competitive advantage with community and nature-based tourism, but struggle with the infrastructure, marketing and other needs that are required to make the sector shine.

TEXTILES AND LEATHER

Woven materials, barkcloth, printed fabrics, hand-dyed designs, embroidery – exports in French-speaking African countries are creating a wealth of artisanal textiles and leather goods. These items generate good prices internationally, if small-scale craftsmen are able to get their goods to global markets, which can be difficult.

OCEANS

The sea has always been an essential part of trade, and the continent's swath of coastline supports many as a source of food and of livelihoods. Fisheries are a crucial source of export earnings for several LDCs, but current global fishing practices are unsustainable. And, the question of subsidies continues to be debated at the World Trade Organization.
