Leach and Pini bring together empirical and theoretical studies that consider the intersections of class, gender and rurality. Each chapter engages with current debates on these concepts to explore them in the context of contemporary social and economic transformations in which global processes that reconstitute gender and class interconnect with and take shape in a particular form of locality: the rural. The book is innovative in that it responds to calls for more critical work on the rural; other contributions to scholarship on gender and rurality but does so through the lens of class. This book places the question of gender, rurality and difference at its centre through its focus on class. It addresses the urban bias of much class scholarship as well as the lack of gender analysis in much rural and class academic work. It focuses on the ways that class mediates the construction and practices of rural men's masculinities and rural women's femininities, challenges prevalent and divergent assumptions with chapters utilising contemporary theorisations of class. With the empirical strongly grounded in theory, this book will appeal to scholars working in the fields of gender, rurality, identity and class studies.

Some of them simply need to support their families. Others, particularly educated women, hope to develop rewarding careers. Many of these women also continue to shoulder the home and family responsibilities that social and cultural norms define as their primary concern. In an effort to balance the conflicting demands of these roles, women in various Asian societies are negotiating, contesting and reconfiguring motherhood.

Social Work in a Corporate Era Linda Davies, 2017-09-29. A striking new feature of the welfare systems in many Western countries is the extent to which market relations have permeated social services. Conceptions of risk management now dominate the way parents and children are responded to while new technologies aim to measure their relationship with state service providers. Bureaucratic control is increasing while resources are reduced. These factors have led to the demise of the traditional role of the social worker as one who engages with the client in a supportive encounter. Professional competence within social work is increasingly tied to mastering scientific knowledge and new technical skills The result of collaboration between authors from Canada Britain and Australia Social Work in a Corporate Era offers a critical overview of these developments and their implications It provides a re evaluation of the assumptions and practices of the critical social work tradition and explores the possibility of rebuilding an emancipatory social work The authors aim to disentangle the debate between Marxism feminism and anti racism in the context of both postmodern challenges and the corporate restructuring of the welfare state Calling for the development of a new politics of social work practice this book addresses many of the urgent issues facing welfare state practitioners in health and social services today
