Guide to the Laboratory Diagnosis of Trachoma. Prepared by the participants in a WHO Symposium. (Pp. 40; 16 figures; Sw. Fr. 12.) Geneva: World Health Organization, 1975.

This booklet is intended to provide 'a system of recommended procedures for use especially in the diagnosis of trachoma in countries where . . . laboratory facilities may be limited'. Methods are given for collecting specimens, detecting inclusion bodies by ordinary and fluorescence microscopy, isolating Chlamydia, and typing strains. The amount of detail makes this a useful working manual; but sophisticated techniques such as the use of irradiated cell cultures for isolation and serotyping by microimmunofluorescence are over-emphasized at the expense of simpler methods such as iodine-staining of inclusions and isolation in unirradiated cells. One of the most valuable features is the set of good colour photographs of Giemsa-stained inclusion bodies and other intracytoplasmic objects that may be mistaken for them.

Human Viral Hepatitis. By A. J. Zuckerman. (Pp. x + 422; illustrated, $49.95.) Amsterdam: North Holland Publishing Company, 1975.

The second edition of Human Viral Hepatitis is twice the length of the first, which appeared only three years ago as Hepatitis Associated Antigens and Viruses. The new title does not reflect a major change in approach. The original material has been revised and pruned, while the general balance of the book has been improved by its expansion to include a description of the newly recognized particles found in the faeces of patients with hepatitis A.

As before, each chapter consists of a review of the published work on a limited topic, and the reference lists will provide useful guides to the English language literature. The new illustrations are well chosen but several of the electron micrographs of hepatitis B show similar features and could be deleted. The reviews are written from an essentially academic standpoint and consist largely of abstracts of the findings reported in individual

Trachoma an infectious keratoconjunctivitis due to chlamydial infection was one of the earliest recognized clinical entities References to it have been noted in Egyptian papyri and in Greco Roman medical treatises Since those times it has remained a most important eye infection and indeed trachoma is still a major cause of blindness in rural communities affecting probably 6 million people Dawson The causal agent of trachoma was identified by Halberstaeter and von Provazek in a much quoted but little read paper published over 75 years ago It was after the isolation and demonstration of the growth of the causal agent of trachoma Chlamydia trachomatis by Tang and his colleagues in China in the late 1950s that there was an enormous increase in our knowledge of these agents The real explosion of knowledge and interest in Chlamydia however has been in the last decade With the growing awareness of the extraordinary commonness of chlamydial infections not only in developing countries but also in the highly developed countries has come a considerable interest from all areas concerned with medical science from clinicians to molecular biologists

Child Health in Complex Emergencies Program on Forced Migration and Health, Mailman School of Public Health, Columbia University, National Research Council, Committee on Population, Roundtable on the Demography of Forced Migration, Lulu Muhe, William M. Weiss, Anne Henderson Siegle, Dory Storms, Meenakshi Ramakrishnan, William J. Moss, 2005-12-08 Addressing the health needs of children in complex emergencies is critical to the success of relief efforts and requires coordinated and effective interventions. However, little systematic work has been undertaken to evaluate such care. To address this need, this monograph presents a review of the published literature in this area, providing background on the burden of disease, the major causes of morbidity and mortality, and the evidence base for effective interventions. It also describes surveys of nongovernmental organizations (NGOs) and international agencies providing care to children in complex emergencies, which were conducted to identify guidelines commonly used to provide such care and assesses the content and limitations of these guidelines. A more in-depth survey of several organizations was also conducted to assess obstacles to this kind of care. On the basis of the survey findings and the review of the published literature, the working group recommended that evidence-based, locally adapted guidelines to address the curative and preventive care of children in complex emergencies and health systems planning should be adopted by ministries of health and supported by the World Health Organization (WHO) and UNICEF. The guidelines should target as much as possible the different levels of health care workers providing care to children to ensure appropriate, effective, and uniform care in a variety of situations. Child Health in Complex Emergencies presents specific examples of areas for further research and guideline development. This report is not intended to be an exhaustive and definitive assessment of child health in complex emergencies. The topic is much too vast and complex, and different individuals and institutions will have incompatible perspectives. Rather, we aim to provide a starting point for discussion and debate on how to improve the care of children in these settings. World Health Organization Publications World Health Organization, 1980. Includes serial and non serial publications from the WHO regional offices, the International Agency for Research on Cancer (IARC), and the Council for International Organizations of Medical Sciences. Subject Catalog Library of Congress, Cumulated Index Medicus, 1972
