REVIEWS After meeting Ms Aghanya myself as a patient I knew that she had a special gift for communicating with her patients As she explains in her book she not only has years of first hand experience as a practitioner but learned as a patient as well just how important proper communication and relationship building can be As I read her book I learned a great deal about how I can better my relationship with my providers as well as how I as a hospital chaplain can better interact with the patients who look to me as one of the members of their team of care providers I strongly urge all healthcare providers as well as those who have found it difficult to develop trusting relationships with their providers to read this book

James M Dakis This is a very informative book to read for both clinicians in practice and patients who may have many concerns about seeing a healthcare provider for the first time Mrs Aghanya has shown examples of many patients that clinicians encounter on a daily basis With funny cartoon illustrations throughout the chapters to describe different patient personalities I thought that she did a very good job of giving her own personal examples and giving tips on how to handle these patients I especially liked reading about an Opinionated Patient she had seen with an elevated blood pressure who was on Coumadin This clinical scenario is very common in practice and the tip she used on how to handle this type of patient was very helpful I also think that this book would be very helpful for nursing nurse practitioner students It could be used as part of the curriculum for undergraduate graduate school and as a tool for teachers to encourage students to give their own examples of patients that they will or have encountered I really enjoyed reading Mrs Aghanya s book and I could relate to many of the scenarios she discussed as a clinician This is a must read for all clinicians
