Moffitt,2015-02-18 Michelangelo Merisi da Caravaggio 1571 1610 has long been recognized as one of the great innovators in the history of art Through detailed analysis of paintings from his early Roman period 1594 1602 this study now situates his art firmly within both its humanistic and its scientific context Here both were so immersed in the purely aesthetic aspects of their art that they neglected those equally important technical phases which must always be observed if results are to be enduring A gradual awakening has taken place only as one horrible example after another of fading darkening discoloration cracking or like type of failure has come to the fore Even in the recent past there have been those who have treated craftsmanship so lightly that their paintings have already badly deteriorated or are doomed to an early demise Small wonder then that more and more contemporary painters profiting from all this are turning to the investigation of the chemical and physical nature and action of pigments the respective functions of oils varnishes and other media the preparation of grounds the possibilities of underpainting etc My personal feeling has always been that if a painting is worth doing at all it is worth doing well And by well I mean not only aesthetically well but technically well At the very outset of my career I was so impressed by the needless deterioration of thousands of paintings that the mastery of craftsmanship became a consuming passion By good fortune I was able to indulge this passion by studying at first hand the works of those leading exponents of sound craftsmanship the old masters In Paris in Italy in Vienna in the Bauhaus in Weimar under the famous Doerner in Munich for years I was able to gratify my inquisitiveness along technical lines One by one I inspected the great masterpieces of old I compared I analysed I investigated I asked questions I read assiduously everything I could lay my hands on And gradually I arrived at a conviction which decades of subsequent painting and teaching have served only to strengthen that a regeneration of art will be possible only when painters cease to look on technical matters as superficial and return to the sound basic principles long ago established by the old masters
